Formula Grants Training Recording v2 - 20230629-1-v01

HOMARI AOKI: Welcome back to this miniseries on the Grid Resilience State and Tribal Formula Grant. This video will cover once you submitted the application, what the next steps will be. After you submit the application, DOE will check the application for compliance. If there are any missing documents or errors that must be addressed, NETL, which will be working on behalf of the Grid Deployment Office, will submit an email and potentially set up a call with the applicant to discuss any changes that must be made. Applicants will have additional time to correct these issues and submit any of the necessary forms.

If there are no changes that must be made to the application, then NETL will provide an update to the applicant that the submission has been approved. Depending on the number of applications that are received, it may take some time before the application terms and conditions are sent to the applicant.

Once the terms and conditions are signed by the applicant, then the grant will be awarded. At the juncture, applicants should be consulting with their assigned DOE project officer who will be identified on their agreement on matters regarding project execution and grant administration. Applicants can provide notification and documentation of resilience projects and sub-awards at any time after they receive the grant.

This information is listed in Section V.G. Resilience Project and Subaward/Subcontract Notification in the administrative legal requirements document. Once the subaward and project documentation are submitted, there are several internal steps on the DOE side, including compliance review, NEPA review, and a cost review that occur before the notice of concurrence is provided back to the recipient authorizing them to proceed with the project.

The NETL project officer must provide a notice of concurrence back to the recipient before projects begin. Please make sure to allow for sufficient time for this process when you provide the required information to DOE. That concludes our miniseries on the Grid Resilience State and Tribal Formula Grant Application. If you have any questions, please submit questions to GDOTribalAssistance@hq.doe.gov. Thank you.
